Abstract:

This paper deals with publishing and studying Coffin JE 55194 and restudying the statue fragment JE 49157 of Prince Haremakhet. The Prince Haremakhet was a High Priest of Amun, He was a son of king Shabaka and the queen Mesbat, and his son the high priest of Amun, called Harkhebi. Haremakhet left only five documents.

The coffin was discovered by the Metropolitan Museum excavations (1918-1919) in a Cachette of material associated with embalming process in Asasif, near Theban Tomb TT 279 of Pabasa and 26th Dynasty Burials. Now the coffin is kept in the basement of Cairo Museum. The back of the coffin is decorated with six blue columns of hieroglyphic inscriptions on a white ground representing the spell eighty-nine of the Book of the Dead.

The statue fragment of Haremakhet was recovered by Maurice Pillet in the Mut Enclosure-Temple of Khonspekhrod at Karnak, it is apart from a standing naophorous statue. Now the statue fragment JE 55194 is kept in the basement of Cairo Museum (SS50). This fragment will be studied, along with its' inscriptions.

I. Introduction

The Prince Haremakhet "Hr-m-3ht", was a High Priest of Amun,<sup>1</sup> and he was an eldest son of king Shabaka, and the queen M<sup>c</sup>-s3-b3-t3 Mesbat,<sup>2</sup> his son was also the high priest of Amun, Hr(m)3h-byt "Harkhebi". "Hr-m-3ht" left only five documents as follows:

1. A hieratic, papyrus Leiden AMS 59c (kept in The Leiden Museum).<sup>3</sup>
2. An outstanding striding statue from the Karnak Cachette CG 42204 (displayed in the Nubian Museum at Aswan)<sup>4</sup>.
3. A statue fragment found in the precinct of Mut temple 3at Karnak (kept in a private collection).
4. Another statue fragment JE 49157 from the same temple (kept in Cairo Museum).
5. An unpublished wooden Coffin from Asasif JE 55194, (kept in Cairo Museum)<sup>5</sup>.

This paper deals with publishing and studying Coffin JE 55194 and restudying the statue fragment JE 49157<sup>6</sup>.

II.1 A rectangular Coffin-Wood- Length 177cm- Width 44cm- Heigh 31 cm (figs. 1-4).

The coffin was discovered by the Metropolitan Museum excavations (1918-1919) in a Cachette of material associated with embalming process in Asasif, C. Causeway near Theban Tomb TT 279 of Pabasa and 26th Dynasty Burials. Now the coffin is kept in the basement of Cairo Museum (SS27B4). Other numbers of the coffin are JE 55194, and SR. 4/11360. It is mentioned in the following references: Ambrose Lansing, "The Egyptian Expedition 1916-1919: II. Excavations in the Asasif at Thebes. Haremakhet was appointed by his father or one of his successors as a high priest of Amun. By the year 656 B.C., he succeeded by his son, Harkhebi, the current high priest of Amun at the time of the adoption stela of Nitocris.<sup>7</sup>

It is noteworthy that, when the coffin was opened no mummy was found, but it contained only resin-impregnated clothes, pieces of natron, and other materials wrapped in cloth were found.<sup>8</sup> Naunton considered this coffin a Dummy Coffin, and he suggested that it was used during the 'opening of the mouth' or other ritual performed as part of the funerary rites. Alternatively, it may have been a symbolic 'house' for the b3 to return to if the real coffin had been destroyed.<sup>9</sup> But in my view, this coffin was for burying the mummy of Haremakhet, and this is confirmed by they were careful to write Spell 89 of the Book of the Dead on it, but due to mysterious and unknown circumstances, his mummy was buried in another coffin, and the rest of the mummification items remaining from the mummification process of Haremakhet were placed in this coffin, considering them as important and sacred items of the deceased.

One might pay attention that the tomb of Haremakhet is still uncovered, but Kees believed that he was probably buried close to the tombs of Padiamunope and Pabasa where the coffin found.<sup>10</sup>

II.1.1 Decoration

On the extreme upper part of the back of the coffin, the winged solar disc<sup>11</sup> is depicted. Below, the scenes are divided into two symmetrical halves, each one consisting of a dd-pillar and then inwards a door consisting of two leaves. On each leaf a wḏ3t-eye is depicted<sup>12</sup>, on a hb-sign (jubilee), on a colored rectangular, decorated with vertical- lines, and in front of each wḏ3t-eye a nfr-sign was depicted. Below the scenes a b3-bird hovering is depicted (fig. 5).

The dd-pillars, the wḏ3t-eyes and the two nfr-signs, might be chosen to express the rising sun from the east, this was confirmed by drawing the signs on the right half of the scenes higher than those of the left half, which indicates that the right half points to the east (sun rise), and the left half points to the west (sun set) (fig. 6).<sup>13</sup>

This is further confirmed by the presence of two nfr-signs, which symbolize the sun rays, light, radiance, and brightness,<sup>14</sup> and at the same time represents the inclination of the skyline from east to west.<sup>15</sup> The two eyes should be considered as the sun of the east and the sun of the west,<sup>16</sup> or Re and Osiris.<sup>17</sup> The two dd-pillars have the same meaning and significance and they should help the movement of the rising sun from east to west.<sup>18</sup>

Below, the b3- bird hovering and heading from the east to the west, as the journey of sun from east to west.

II.1.2 Inscriptions

The back of the coffin is decorated with six blue columns of hieroglyphic inscriptions on a white ground representing the spell eighty-nine of the Book of the Dead. The version of this spell does not have its usual title “causing the b3 to rejoin its corpse in the Underworld” but here a large b3- bird above the spell is depicted. The unification of the b3 with corpse of “Hr-m-3ht” mimics the unification of the cosmic Solar- b3 with the Osirian- corpse, allowing in this case the rebirth of “Hr-m-3ht” with the sun on the eastern horizon.

To translate the texts of this spell on this coffin, we relied on various translations, especially on papyri and on copies dated especially to the late period through the

II.1.3 Dating

As for the dating of this coffin, it certainly dated to the end of Twenty-fifth Dynasty, as the nearest tombs, and other artifacts found with it in Asasif date back to this time.<sup>19</sup> Haremakhmet probably died in the ninth year of King Tanutamun's reign,<sup>20</sup> i.e., at the end of the Twenty-fifth Dynasty (704-660 B.C).

II.1.4 Commentary

Spell 89 was an integral part of funerary depictions from the New Kingdom onward. This spell aimed to let the b3 return to its body in the underworld, emphasizing the importance of the b3's return to the deceased's body within the tomb. This spell protected this process, reinforcing one of their fundamental religious beliefs. The vignette consists of the deceased, usually depicted as a mummy, lying on a funerary bed or lion bed, beneath which are canopic jars, and a bird "b3" hovering above the mummy. Coffins of the Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth Dynasties included spell 89, which was placed in the center of the body, in the central panel, with a vertical offering formula at the bottom of the coffin. Spell 89 was placed below the first register containing Spell 125 of the Book of the Dead, which followed the b3 with the body after the judgment.<sup>21</sup>

The High Priest of Amun Haremakhet in The Cairo Museum (JE 55194 and JE 49157)

55194 is kept in the basement of Cairo Museum (SS50). The main resources of this statue fragment are as follows: Maurice Pillet, "Rapport sur les travaux de Karnak(1924-1925)", ASAE 25 (1925): 16.; Gustave Lefebvre, "Le grand prêtre d'Amon, Harmakhis, et deux reines de la XXVe dynastie", ASAE 25 (1925) 25-33.; Dows Dunham, and Laming Macadam, "Names and Relationships of the Royal Family of Napata", JEA XXXV (1949): 142, 143, 147.; Jean Leclant, Recherches sur les monuments thébains de la XXVe dynastie dite éthiopienne, (Le Caire: Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, 1965), 117, 334 n. 1.; PM II<sup>2</sup>, 272.; Lana Troy, Patterns of Queenship in Ancient Egyptian Myth and History, Uppsala 1986, 176.; Lohwasser, Die Königlichen Frauen, 31.

This fragment includes basically a large part of the legs, which spread apart by the walking movement, extends outward, it also shows the lower edge of the robe, which is broken above the knees, the feet and the entire base are missed, but the receding pillar which gradually blends into the front side of the garment, still visible, which may have been topped by a naos or a statuette, as a naophorous statue (figs. 7-8),<sup>22</sup> the nearest statues are: statue CG 730 in Cairo Museum<sup>23</sup>; a statue in Mr. Very Brundage, Santa Barbara, Cal.; no. 2/24<sup>24</sup>, and other statue in M. H. De Young Memorial Museum, San Francisco, Cal.; no. 54664<sup>25</sup>.

However, we believe that this receding pillar is more likely to have had the ram's head of Amun, and the nearest statue to be compared with, is a statue, CG 42160 in the Cairo Museum of Bakenkhonsu II, the high priest of Amun during the reign of Ramesses III,<sup>26</sup> or that its summit could be also topped by a base on which a statuette was placed, most likely to be a statuette of Amun, probably sitting, because the area given, does not allow to be for a standing statuette, as in the following examples: a statue in The Metropolitan Museum no. 07.228.33<sup>27</sup>, a kneeling statue in Cairo Museum CG 42178<sup>28</sup>, and statue CG 42193<sup>29</sup>. It is also probable that the receding pillar topped by an offering table, as in the statue CG 42182 in Cairo Museum<sup>30</sup>.

We believe in both cases, the statuette or the figure inside the naos is for Amun, as the accompanying text indicates that Haremakhet is looking at the statue of Amun (m33 m twt.f dsrt Hr-m-<3ht> .).

II.2.2 Dating

Like the above coffin this statute fragment dated to the end of the twenty fifth Dynasty.

III. Conclusion

Haremakhet obtained the highest levels of government during the reigns of his contemporary kings, perhaps since his father, Shabaka, Shabataka, Taharqa, and Tanutamun. Through the titles that Haremakhet bore on his five documents, we can conclude the following:

He is the eldest and beloved son of the king. He bore, at first, priestly titles that indicate his important religious role, as he was the supervisor of all the priests of the Theban Nome. He bore titles that placed him in the service of the king, as he was the sole companion of the king and the keeper of his secrets in all king's places. He was the supervisor of administrative works; he was also the seal bearer of the king of Lower Egypt and the one who accompanied the king in the palace.

One of the principal issues raised resulted by from this statue fragment is the mention of Queen Tabaktenamun, who held important titles such as the daughter of a king, the wife of a king, and the sister of a king, and held the title of Priestess of both of Hathor and Neith. The statue did not mention her relationship with Horemakhet, the issue which led Lefebvre to consider her to be the mother of Horemakhet. Dunham and Macadam,<sup>33</sup> followed by Leclant,<sup>34</sup> considered her to be the daughter of Piankhy and perhaps the wife of Taharqa. Meanwhile, Morkot, believed that her Egyptian name meant she may have inherited her royal titles from the royal family in the Delta and held Egyptian religious titles. If she had a connection relation to Haremakhet's mother, perhaps the Kushite queen, Mesbat, adopted an Egyptian name and titles.<sup>35</sup>

We see that perhaps Tabaktenamun was the wife of Haremakhet and that she inherited her royal titles from the royal house in the Delta, and perhaps she was a widow from this house or from the royal Kushite house, and Haremakhet married her, and she played a major religious role with him, as seen through resulted from her name and titles, as the meaning of her name is "the servant of Amun", and she was the priestess of Hathor, and of Neith.

We do not know exactly what the relationship between Tabaktenamun and Haremakhet was. There may be two men with the same name and titles, one of them is the son of Tabaktenamun the owner of a statue fragment, published here and the other is the owner of the coffin published here also, the son of Mesbat. This problem remains until the discovery of a document that shows us the relationship between Horemakhet and Tabaktenamun.
